Saccharomyces cerevisiae has three genetically distinct isoforms of glutathione S-transferase that are related to the Saccharomyces carlsbergensis UDP-glucuronyltransferase (Yeager, L. A., and Peterson, P. E. (1992) J. Biol. Chem. 267, 24239-24241). Genes for these mu- and omega-class glutathione S-transferases have been cloned and sequenced. Each is a single-copy gene in the genome with a 5'-untranslated leader region of 16-28 nucleotides that is followed by the coding region that is interrupted by one intron. The coding region for both enzymes is 2979 nucleotides long, with a 5'-untranslated leader of 121 and 130 nucleotides, respectively. A third strain of S. cerevisiae, LS7D, has been obtained that lacks both the mu- and omega-class glutathione S-transferases; this strain grows normally on 5-FOA and loses viability
