19 Mar 2014 Khan, however, shot down the idea in August last year, saying it was time to "move on" because a unilateral action would not produce any positive results. Instead of pursuing a policy that dealt with the issue in the spirit of bilateral negotiations, Khan, his government hooligans and media were in favour of peaceful, diplomatic changes. The following year, however, in a move that left his cabinet colleagues shivering with horror, Khan came down in support of a military coup in Pakistan. He openly supported Benazir Bhutto's perception that Pakistan was under attack from a neighbour (India) who wanted to destroy the country and its state. Pakistan - Wikipedia Pakistan was created in August 1947, when the British, Indian and Afghan governments signed an agreement providing for a separate and independent state of Pakistan in place of Indian-controlled British-ruled India and Afghanistan. Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto was elected

Prime Minister of Pakistan on 11 February 1973. In 1977, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was assassinated and Zia ul-Haq assumed power. In a 1979 coup, he purged Bhutto's associates from the military and political scenes, becoming both the Chief of Army Staff and Chairman of the Pakistan Peoples Party, with whom he had been a rival before the successful coup.
