The government of conservative President Lech Kaczyński is a staunch ally of Israel and a key participant in the European Union's policy of sanctions on Iran. And that policy is about to be strengthened. The government plans to add the country's own anti-Iran sanctions by the end of the year. The new sanctions will be part of a set of measures that Poland is taking against Iran. Earlier this year, the country enacted a law prohibiting the import and export of Iranian crude oil. The sanctions that Kaczyński intends to impose on the Islamic republic are less severe than the EU's current ones. They will include barring Iranian businesses from dealing with Polish companies and banks. But they will target a much broader range of goods. Kaczyński says his government is prepared to walk away from negotiations if Tehran shows no willingness to agree to limiting its nuclear program. Poland's Prime Minister Donald Tusk has told reporters that Polish-Iranian trade will be severely limited if a permanent agreement cannot be achieved.
