Using the Food and Drug Administration's antimicrobial guidance program for hospitals, we assessed the impact of a "mail-in" system in which automated fax messages were sent to drug-use committees at hospitals to remind providers of the agents to be used for selected indications. Using the regression-based logistic model, we estimated the odds of using guideline-recommended agents for selected indications before and after the introduction of the mail-in reminders. We also estimated the impact of mail-in reminders on rate of compliance with the regimen of agents identified by the cost of suboptimal antimicrobial use. The odds of prescription of guideline-recommended agents for methicillin-sensitive Staphylococcus aureus were significantly higher for patients with bloodstream infections (OR = 1.23, 95% CI = 1.01 to 1.50), and for patients with pneumonia (OR = 1.26, 95% CI = 1.05 to 1.53). The odds of using guideline-recommended agents for patients with bacteraemia and bacteremia caused by S. aureus were significantly higher for patients who received mail-in reminders (OR = 1.31, 95% CI = 1.09 to 1.58 and OR = 1.33, 95% CI = 1.14 to 1.56, respectively). The median compliance with protocol-specified agents for methicillin-sensitive Staphylococcus aureus bacteremia and bacteraemia was significantly higher for patients who received mail-in reminders (21 vs. 5 and 18 vs. 3, respectively). The

by computed tomography.
Radiation dose from computed tomography is much lower than that of angiography. So it has been used increasingly as a screening examination for the evaluation of renal
