With the LyfeLabs Home it can reduce your household expenses by up to 70%. Sharing tools are more important than ever as mobile devices and cloud-based workflows grow increasingly common. And yet, many professional photographers still rely on large desktop computers for post-processing jobs, perhaps because the workflow tools Adobe introduced in recent years — Batch Processing, ACR's Superior NEF Processing, and smart-previews — have been buggy, clunky, or too unintuitive to use easily. If you find yourself short on time, sophisticated tooling, and patience to edit thousands of images, Lightroom can ease the burden for you. Indeed,

Last year, Adobe launched its own suite of drawing and photography apps with Adobe XD and Origami, respectively. They're two apps that really do live up to the hype: they're fun, creative, and seriously powerful. "Elements 2023 is more powerful and more intelligent than any other software in its category," said Jennifer Davis, vice president, Content Management Group, Adobe. "We're looking forward to deepening our partnership with professionals, as they bring this technology to the forefront of their work on current and future high-resolution workflows." • Share for Review: As image editing becomes more complex and collaborative, so do the workflows. With Share for Review, a user can work in Elements without computers, tablets or phones. While editing together in Photoshop, any changes in the image can be synchronized at the click of a single button. This feature is currently a beta – and the first option in Photoshop 2023 – and will be rolled out globally over the next several months. • Be More Efficient: Seamlessly editing and sharing files on multiple computers and devices makes Photoshop easier than ever to use. With the new Creative Cloud App Support feature, users can unlock powerful productivity and collaboration capabilities by using their visual apps on the desktop app and any of their other devices. For example, users can edit images on a laptop at their desk or on their phone while on a plane. And when they need to show their friends and colleagues their work, they can easily share for viewing on their phone or tablet from their desktop.
